Dear Gene:

Thank you for your letter. I have taken up your invitation with Eloise Page and she will be delighted to be there and to talk on national and strategic intelligence on May 14. I am sure that your young officers will find it both rewarding and interesting.

I am sure you must be enjoying that fine Command, and I hope I can go by some time in the not too distant future.

With every good wish to you and yours for a happy 1976 and the prayer that it may be more tranquil for all of us.

Faithfully,

V. A. Walters

Dear General Walters:

Here at the Intelligence Center and School we are training career Military Intelligence officers in the management of all disciplines of intelligence. You have the opportunity to enhance our efforts by encouraging general officers and senior civilians to visit and address our faculty and students.

Approximately 180 students are enrolled in the Military Intelligence Officer Advanced Course at any given time. These officers attend a seven month course of instruction to prepare them for intelligence assignments throughout the world.

Training for our career officers is primarily tactical because much of the Army's intelligence mission is oriented at Corps level and below. However, exposure to strategic intelligence is extremely important to our students because of the significant role that it must play if we are going to win the first battle of the next war. The students' and faculty's knowledge in the strategic disciplines would be broadened by a visit from a key figure in your agency.

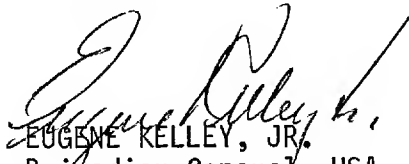

Accordingly, with your concurrence, I would like to invite Miss Eloise Page to talk to our advanced course students on 14 May 1976. On that day she would address two classes in session and deliver the graduation address to a third. However, if her schedule does not permit a visit on that day, any time between 31 March and 14 May 1976 would insure that she would speak before all three classes.

The visit of a distinguished individual of her position and background would significantly enrich our efforts and would be well received by the students and staff.

Sincerely,
